

Federal Communication Commission,

As a parent of young children I expect the FCC to consistently and aggressively enforce all decency standards. All over the air broadcasts should be constantly monitored and timely/severe punishments should be assessed when enforcing decency standards. I should not have to police over the air broadcast channels for explicit language or nudity.

With the significant household penetration of cable, pay TV and the Internet there are numerous avenues for those seeking indecent content.

We need to keep the public airwaves free of indecent material and enforce the laws of this great land.

I care about my children and am not above removing the TV if it protects my children from indecent material.

Thank you for your consideration,

Mark Snyder
